Albert G. Martin, and Things That Count, by Deacon Eithan Wilcox. The anniversary exercises will close Wednesday with a church home night, when messages will be received from present and former members of the church. There will also be divine service and special singing.

Frank Saunders of Westerly and his yoke of big black oxen were an attraction at the North Stonington grange fair Thursday. Mr. Saunders and his cattle walked from Westerly to the fair grounds, a distance of nine miles, and then the oxen, with Mr. Saunders driving, took second premium in the stone laden drag contest. After this event Mr. Saunders and his oxen started on their homeward march, Mr. Saunders remarking as he walked off the grounds with ox whip in hand:

"I came up here because I was invited and brought my oxen along, and didn't know we were going to do any hauling. So long as we were here we might as well do whatever Horace Vose, who bossed the oxen show, wanted us to do. Hope our coming has caused no hard feeling, for we are going back satisfied with our trip."

This is the pair of oxen that Mr. Saunders planned to drive to New York and return about two weeks ago, to cover the distance in a remarkably quick time for a pair of steers. The owner and his oxen were pictured in the New York and Boston newspapers, but the proposed trip was finally abandoned.

Dr. Loren F. Wood, formerly of Westerly, now a resident of Point Lomar homestead, a community of theosophists, and who recently figured in a will case, where it is alleged that a bequest of $150,000 to the society was obtained by fraud, was witness in San Diego, Cal., Thursday.

George L. Patterson, who obtained a writ of habeas corpus, was by decree of the court permitted to see his wife, Mrs. Julia P. Quinn, alone at the homestead.

In court Mrs. Quinn told of her life at Point Lomar. She said she would prefer going to her home with her brother, as she would be supported there as she should be. The court asked why she did not go with her brother and she replied that "other arrangements had been made."

Dr. Wood testified that it would not be for Mrs. Quinn's interest to have her entire liberty at present.

The additional voting district given to Westerly under the state redistricting plans, which carries with it an additional representative in the general assembly, will be the red flag before the political bull, as but for this all would be peace and quietness in the local political arena. It would signify have been Albert H. Langworthy for representative. Mr. Langworthy has already served two terms and to him there is no opposition. He resides in the First voting district, therefore the contest will be confined to the Second voting district, so far as goes the nomination for member of the general assembly.

Heretofore it has been the custom of the town to suggest the nominee and the suggestion carried considerable weight. But this condition has changed, for before the committee has met for the purpose of considering candidates two citizens have publicly announced their candidacy for the nomination of representative for the Second district.

They are Thomas W. Biddle, boss fisher at Potter Hill. He served in the town council and has engaged in many local political battles.

The other candidate for nomination is Joseph T. Murphy, interested in business affairs and active in matters pertaining to the industrial interests of the town. He was an officer of the association of business men whose main purpose was boosting Westerly. When this organization was succeeded by the Westerly Board of Trade Mr. Murphy became directly interested in the work of that association. Both men are republicans, democrats being of an almost unknown quantity in Westerly.

There is nothing to indicate opposition to the nomination of Louis W. Arnold as state senator from Westerly.

After continuation of several cases on the docket in the Third district court Friday, Judge Oliver H. Williams heard the case of Joseph Quarantillo against Giovanni Turoni, an action to recover damages of $500 for injuries sustained. Quarantillo hired a horse from Turoni July 2 and the horse kicked Quarantillo while seated in the wagon, breaking his left leg below the knee. At the time of the mishap the horse was at a standstill, waiting to be driven through a barway that a companion of Quarantillo was opening. There were many witnesses called and the case occupied the attention of the court through the day. The case was not continued and will be further considered Friday. Judge N. B. Lewis appears for defendant and Attorney Clarence E. Roche for plaintiff.
